broken and that she should just take it easy for a while. It wasn't until she began to get pain into her left shoulder and hand that she decided to seek help at BritChiro. Examination and X-rays showed that her shoulder and hand pain was due to spinal restrictions in her neck, which despite being so long standing still were correctable through Chiropractic adjustments. When her neck was adjusted she felt a 'crack', which she had been explained about. It was an unusual experience but didn't hurt at all. After an intensive course of Chiropractic treatment she is now pain free, can move without restriction and only needs an adjustment every six to eight weeks to keep the good results.
